Meanwhile, Rahul said he was "shell-shocked" when he was asked to be a judge on Star TV's 'Just Dance' reality TV show.

In 2010, he launched his own home productions titled 'Foreign' and 'Compromise', which he produced, directed and starred in. Both films focus on hard-hitting themes, with powerful story lines that aim to portray NRIs in non-stereotypical roles.

'Foreign' received excellent reviews and won him Best Actor in a lead role at the South Asian Film Festival in Goa, and Best Director and Best Film at the American International Film Festival in Michigan, USA. The film found entry into a further 3 festivals in India and a total of 10 worldwide .

His second production 'Compromise', in which he has given a harsh realistic performance, will release in May 2011. Critics say that he has given a defining performance.

Rahul has two more movies in production, 'Glamour', focusing on actors attempting to make it in the Hollywood film industry, and 'Indian Traffic', revolving around the world of human trafficking. Both films have heavy shooting schedules in India.

The talented Indian artist is also now venturing into documentary film making. Currently in India, he is interviewing eunuchs for his hard-hitting documentary, 'In the Life of a Eunuch,' a no-holds-barred view of the desperate, humiliating and pathetic lives eunuchs lead in India.

Said Rahul, "I'm happiest when I'm working."
